THE FUTURE OF PARTIES. On the 25th ult. articles appeared in wo papers, one at Auburn, New York, and one at Louisville. Kentucky, each of which takes a similar view of future trouble, in case the mixed question of reconstruction is not settled before the Presidential election of 1868. The Auourn paper is published at the home of Secretary Seward, and we think we do not err in assigning to the Secretary of State, the inspiration, at least, of the article. We quote liberally from the article in question, which treats of "security for our future." The paper says: In respect to this the first question which arises, is whether Congress pos-

In respect to this the first question which arises, is whicher. Congress possesses any power whatever to exact from the late rebels any security for their future behavior. To consider this aright, we must first settle in our minds the precise status of the robels as members of their respective States, and whether there exists any way of obtaining security from them as individuals. So far as the precise status of the robels as members of their respective States, and whether there exists any way of obtaining security from them as individuals. So far as the precise status of the robels as members of their respective States, and whether there exists any way of obtaining security from them as individuals. So far as the process of the precise in the people from the different states and the process of the proces members of their respective States, And here we must consider that these States are acknowledged and proclaimed to be inside the Union under the Constitution, although some of their functions are suspended by the peculiarity of their situation. They are within the Union yet in certain respects, although out of their proper practical relations to the Government. This being their condition, is there any way in which the Federal Government can exact any formal guaranty from these States that their inhabitants will never again rebei? We suppose not, except through an amendment to the Constitution, and no such amendment would be likely to be ratified by three-fourths of the States. We dismiss that idea also as one of no "practical account.

This brings us to the consideration of the question whether any security can be exacted by indirection as a logical result of any practical line of policy toward them. It has been suggested that since there appears to be no way to exact security for future behavior by direct means they shall be denied representation in Congress and in National Conventions until they so amend their State Conventions as to declare the Union of States to be perpetual. This idea seems to obtain favor with those who have been rebels.

Those who, like Judgo Shellabarger, question which looms up grimly before us, if our difficulties are not settled before the next Presidential election, is, What and which may then be the Government to which our allegiance will be due? Of the two parties, two Presidents elect, so to speak, which will be the legitimate one who will bayea right to be sworn in and to administer the Government?" It then indulges in the Government?" It then indulges in the following hypothesis and conclusions:

Let us suppose that things drift on without any definite settlement until 1868—that isn't far off, and will be upon us, possibly, before we are ready for it us, possibly, before we are ready for it us, it is a suppose that the control of the report—Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Chark, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, H. S. Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkley, Williams, Wilson and Yates.

without any definite settlement until 1863—that isn't far off, and will be upon us, possibly, before we are ready for it—and the Kepublican Party nominates General Sherman for the Presidency, and the Conservative or the Democratic Party nominates General Banks for the same office. General Grant and his party, let us suppose, run electors in every State according to the Constitution and obtain a clear majority of votes in the Electoral College, Wouldn't they take it as a matter of course that he would in that case be entitled to be sworn into the office of President, and to enter upon the discharge of his duties as such? Suppose again that General Sherman and his party should have electoral tickets in only a part of the States, say in twenty-five of them only—and should receive only a majority of all the votes in the Electoral College, but a majority of the electoral tickets are voted for—what then? At the first blush, we would naturally say that General Sherman failed of an election, having received only a minority of all the votes in the Electoral College. But would the "Republicans submit to that?" Wouldn't they revolt and become rebels, and declare that their candidate, though he didn't re-

ably if he could be, forcibly if h Furthermore, let it be supposed that

Furthermore, let it be supposed that both of these candidates should be sworn in by Judges of the Supreme Court, each surrounded by his pretorian guard, at different places in the District of Columbia or even outside of It, and that each should proceed to appoint a Cabinet and organize the "government," claiming legitimacy, and denouncing all opponents as traitors. Suppose a part of the representatives of the people from the different States should meet and recognize Gen. Grant and his Cabinet as the "Government," and a part of the representatives should which such a state of things would plunge it, arrange a compromise, and that one of them would give up his claims to the Presidency in the interests of peace. Such a spectacle would indeed be sublime, and fill the whole divilized world with righture and astonishment; but we have used these distinguished names simply to represent possibilities and to illustrate our meaning. Neither of them might be candidates, but instead, two uncompromising sectionalists, or two persons who would not besitate to overwhelm the country with the nameless agonies of internecine revolution to gratify the linsatiate lust for power.

He, did not, however, express himself any further upon the matter, and gave no indications as to how how did et in reference to it.

It is well known that the only way Maryland, West Virginia, Missouri and Tennessee have been held in the ands of loyal men, is by the disfranchising of Rebeis, and it is also a matter of record that the disfranchise policy was inaugurated in Tennessee by Andrew Johnson, as Military Governor.
